Chapter 1 by mir shahbingov marri

Jack and Jill had lived together as cousins in there family home.almost of the same age they had been friends and fighters.both were good in studies and sports,but were competitive, jealous, and big mouths.they grew up to be professionals and today Jill was coming home after graduation from medical college. Jack had not seen for many years as he was away for his own studies but he felt something as he set eyes on her and did Jill believe her eyes,yes this was jack.slowly over the next few days they availed the opportunities to see more of each other.curiously ,challenge, and hormones were in action.and in counter action were their natures.they found it difficult to agree.soon they heard of the match making their parents were planing their engagements and both understood what it ment.they asked for time but as it was traditional family few things were unquestionable.you can't go against the family,both were at cross roads.they wanted each other but .their grandfather explained that marriage is commitment and things settle down and if you have a better choice OK otherwise there is no choice. one day jack and Jill talked and bargained with each other. Will you listen to me , yes if you will, will you,yes if,will you so on so forth .and they decided OK we do like or sort of love each other ,then OK.jack and Jill got married.there were minor issues here and there but it was good .one day jack was told that he had to go look after the family business and Jill go along with him as his elder brother had been doing itfor a long time now.Jill was happy to be away from the family restrictions.she planned to start a clinic there.slowly life started to test them both, they had every thing except that jack couldn't anything illogical and jack couldn't take no for an answer. Occasionally she threatened to go back and once even asked for a divorce.jack explained to her that things didn't work out that way and that it was impossible in their society.

There was quite a fight and both had to go back to their respective homes. Jill was heartbroken and missed him and did like it that her husband was alone he was still there but she was back he was happy to have her back but this time they had
